"Change in US Secret Service -- Robots, Samos-Satellites, and Cameras Replace the Spy -- A Look Behind the Scenes of C.I.A."

The 20 April 1965 issue of the West German daily Die Welt (published in Hamburg) contained an article, including a picture of the newly-appointed CIA Director, on changing techniques in espionage activity. The article includes a brief resume of Admiral Raborn's background, pointing out that his appointment
"brings a little light into the clandestine work of the CIA.
He is a technician who knows rockets, modern weapons, electronic brains, and satellites."

The balance of the article reports US press statements on the "image of CIA," briefly mentioning the book, "The Invisible Government," and pointing to the disadvantage of CIA's "special status" in not being required to divulge expenditures, number of personnel, etc.
